For many poor women in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil in the early 20th century, the only work available was in factory sweatshops or big city department stores. A young Portuguese immigrant, Maria do Carmo managed to escape this fate when she responded to an advertisement in a magazine and was cast as the lead actress in a film produced and directed by American William Jansen titled Urutau (1919). She would become the motion picture star Carmen Santos. In a fascinating interview in 1929 with the fan magazine Cinearte, Santos admitted that Urutau, the very film in which she starred was the first film that she had ever seen in the theatre:

Quando acabou a filmagem… o meu interesse pela fita cresceu, tomou vulto e me empolgou porque… porque eu desejava conhecer um Cinema, vêr um film, afinal!... Até então nunca tinha ido a um Cinema, nunca tinha visto um film! Eu era tão pobresinha! E o que eu ganhava – tão pouco!... A primeira fita que vi em minha vida foi a em que trabalhei!... Tenho, ao menos, essa pequenina gloria!

(Vidal 1929, 34. Original orthography preserved)

Following Santos’s path, one can trace the trajectory of Brazilian film, headquartered in Rio de Janeiro, from the silent era to the creation of the industrial base of the sound film industry (Noronha 1987). [Fig 1. Carmen Santos portrait. WFP-SANT01]

Despite the praise it received at special showings in Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, Urutau did not catch the attention of exhibitors. Omega Filmes, the producing company founded by Jansen, folded and the only print of the film disappeared (Pessoa 2002, 31-32). However, around this time, Santos met Antonio Lartigau Seabra, a young businessman and member of a prominent Portuguese textile family. Nine years her senior, he had received a modern European education and was devoted to horses, cars, and planes. “Antonico,” as he was called, became the principal source of encouragement and financial support for the actress’s projects (Pessoa 2002, 34-38).

In the 1920s, Santos was often featured in the pages of Brazil’s newspapers and magazines with stories about two controversial projects in which she was involved—motion picture adaptations of Julio Ribeiro’s A Carne and Benjamin Costallat’s Melle. Cinema. Both novels were considered exceedingly lascivious by the era’s standards. Although filming did not go forward on either project, Santos remained in the public eye through news items accompanied by provocative photographs that showcased her beauty, a strategy that was unheard of for Brazilian actresses during this era. (Pessoa 2002, 46-49). [Fig 2. Carmen Santos’s autographed photograph, dedicated to the readers of A Scena Muda. - WFP-SANT03] After a respite following the birth of her first child with Lartigau Seabra, Santos joined a group from Cataguases, Minas Gerais, agreeing to star in a film directed by Humberto Mauro, Sangue Mineiro (1929). The experience inspired her to develop her own project, Lábios sem beijos, with Adhemar Gonzaga. Filming was inexplicably halted although it was eventually completed without her participation under Mauro’s direction (Pessoa, 92-103). After the birth of her second child in September 1930, Santos starred in Limite (1931), Mário Peixoto’s first film. They joined forces for another film, Onde a terra acaba, an ambitious project which was to be filmed on Marabaia Island. [Fig 3. Publicity stills Onde a terra acaba (1931), Cinearte. WFP-SANT04] The production met with great enthusiasm by the press which constantly exalted the determination of the producer and director to put forth a national cinema project of unprecedented scale. [Fig 4. A Scena Muda praises Carmen Santos’s and Mário Peixoto’s determination in making Onde a terra acaba despite the production’s difficulties. The article in Portuguese terms the enterprise “the huge hope that will ‘tomorrow’ become the big realization.” WFP-SANT05] However, the project was interrupted due to a misunderstanding between the producer and the director. Unwilling to give up, Santos engaged the support of Ademar Gonzaga’s studio, Cinédia, hired Gabus Mendes to direct, and finished the film, which had already received significant publicity. It premiered in 1933 but was coolly received by the public (Pessoa 2002, 133-44). [Fig 5. Poster Onde a terra acaba (1933). WFP-SANT02]

However, this critical failure did not discourage her and she turned to her former partner Humberto Mauro at this later stage in her career. Planning for sound film’s new technological requirements, Mauro and Santos founded Brasil Vox Filmes, which would later become Brasil Vita Filmes. While waiting for the studio to be constructed the company produced a number of silent short films, of which no extant prints are known. The experiments conducted by Santos and Mauro were crucial to the development of Brazilian national sound film production but a fire in the 1940s caused the loss of the majority of prints of films produced by the studio (Vieira 1987, 181). [Fig 6. Carmen Santos on the cover of A Scena Muda, 1931. WFP-SANT08]

Carmen Santos refused to conform to the role of the seductive muse, taking charge of her professional life by choosing her own projects, hiring her directors, and producing, starring and directing. The one silent era film that she directed, A Carne (1923) was shot but never released for various reasons (Pessoa 2002, 48-49).
Unfortunately, a complete evaluation of her contribution to the development of the Brazilian film industry is prejudiced by the irreparable loss of most of her films. Only three films within which Santos appears as an actress survive in complete form--Sangue mineiro (1929), Limite (1931), and Argila (1940). [Figs 7 and 8. Carmen Santos in Sangue mineiro (1929). WFP-SANT06 and WFP-SANT07] However, according to the Cinemateca Brasileira website, surviving footage from the unfinished Onde a terra acaba (1933) directed by Mário Peixoto, were used for a documentary in 2001.

Ana Pessoa

Bibliography:

Archival Paper Collections

Jurandyr Noronha Archive. Museu da Imagem e do Som do Rio de Janeiro. MIS-RJ

Cinemateca do Museu de Arte Moderna. BRR.

Cinemateca Brasileira de São Paulo. BRS.
A. Archival Filmography: Extant Film Titles

1. Carmen Santos as Producer and Actress

Sangue mineiro. Dir./sc.: Humberto Mauro, prod.: Agenor Corte de Barros, Homero Cortes Domingues, Carmen Santos (Phebo Filme do Brasil S.A., 1929), cas.: Carmen: Onde a terra acaba (unfinished). Dir./sc. Mário Peixoto, prod.: Carmen Santos, Mário Peixoto (1931) cas.: Carmen Santos, si, b&w, 35mm, 1,063 ft. Archive: BRS.

2. Carmen Santos as Actress

Limite. Prod./dir./sc.: Mário Peixoto (1931), cas.: Carmen Santos, si, b&w, 120 min., 10,958 ft., 35mm. Archive: BRS, BRR, MXU, FRG.

Argila. Dir./prod./sc.: Humberto Mauro (Brasil Vita Filmes, S.A., 1940), cas.: Carmen Santos, sd, b&w, 8,530 ft., Archive: BRS.

B. Filmography: Not Extant Titles:

1. Carmen Santos as Producer

A Carne, 1924 (unfinished).

2. Carmen Santos as Producer and Actress

Melle Cinéma, 1925; Onde a terra acaba, 1933; Favela dos meus amores, 1935; Cidade mulher, 1936;

3. Carmen Santos as Producer, Director, Screenwriter, and Actress

4. Carmen Santos as Director and Actress

A Carne, 1923 (unfinished).

5. Carmen Santos as Actress

Urutau, 1919; Lábios sem beijos, 1929.
Credit Report: Because Carmen Santos’s career was marked by numerous interrupted film productions, unfinished film fragments constitute a relevant source of information about her career. Although FIAF does not list Onde a terra acaba, 1931, as extant, the Cinemateca Brasileira lists remaining extant images of the unedited film as used in a contemporary documentary Onde a terra acaba (Sérgio Machado, 2001). After losing financial support that would allow her to finish A Carne as a director, Santos resumed the project solely as the producer in 1924 (Pessoa 2002, 46-56). However, the Cinemateca Brasileira only lists the 1924 film under its filmography.

D. Streamed Media

Limite (dir./sc. Mário Peixoto, 1931) clip:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=f_HytYxGTNk&feature=channel

For internal (editors) use only

Figure and Document Source Attribution:

Fig. 1. postcard: Carmen Santos portrait Source: purchased 6/9/04 by contributor

Fig 2. website download electronic image: Carmen Santos’s autographed photograph, dedicated to the readers of A Scena Muda Source: http://www.museusegall.org.br A Scena Muda film magazine, Biblioteca Digital das Artes e do Espetáculo, Museu Lasar Segall, São Paulo, Brasil

Fig 3. website download electronic image: Publicity stills Onde a terra acaba (1931), Cinearte Source: http://www.museusegall.org.br Cinearte film magazine, Biblioteca Digital das Artes e do Espetáculo, Museu Lasar Segall, São Paulo, Brasil

Fig 4. website download electronic image: A Scena Muda praises Carmen Santos’s and Mário Peixoto’s determination in making Onde a terra acaba despite the production’s difficulties. The article in Portuguese terms the enterprise “the huge hope that will ‘tomorrow’ become the big realization” Source: http://www.museusegall.org.br A Scena
Muda film magazine, Biblioteca Digital das Artes e do Espetáculo, Museu Lasar Segall, São Paulo, Brasil

Fig 5. website download electronic image: Poster Onde a terra acaba (1933) Source: http://www.cinemateca.com.br Cinemateca Brasileira (São Paulo)

Fig. 6. website download electronic image: Carmen Santos on the cover of A Scena Muda film magazine, 1931, Source: http://www.museusegall.org.br A Scena Muda, Biblioteca Digital das Artes e do Espetáculo, Museu Lasar Segall, São Paulo, Brasil

Fig 7. website download electronic image/FIAF archive: Carmen Santos in Sangue mineiro (1929), Source: http://www.cinemateca.com.br Cinemateca Brasileira (São Paulo)

Fig. 8. website download electronic image/FIAF archive: Carmen Santos in Sangue mineiro (1929), Source: http://www.cinemateca.com.br Cinemateca Brasileira (São Paulo)